The Guild Aims

To encourage and promote the craft of enamelling and the work of members

To seek to exert a progressive influence on standards of workmanship and design in enamelling.

To foster good public relations and develop links with other crafts.

Everyone joins as a member; no qualifications are required other than an interest in enamelling.

In the UK the Guild is divided into eight geographical regions, each having a representative on the Executive Committee.
Details of regional meetings are posted in the Journal and on the Guild website and some regions have their own local newsletter. Members from any area are welcome at the regional meetings.

The Guild also has regions for overseas members. Overseas members receive the Journal, are encouraged to attend the annual conference and regional meetings, but do not borrow books from the library.

Further information on current news, events and related items can also be found on the Guild website and on our Facebook page.

Awards and Selection

Anyone can join the Guild, even without any previous enamelling experience or qualifications. However it is hoped that a simple interest or the aim of extending one's knowledge will lead to an aspiration to gain new enamelling skills.

To encourage this the Guild offers incentives with awards for work, both simple and advanced. These can also give tangible recognition of each member's enamelling achievements, and there is something to suit everyone. The assessments are not very daunting although standards are maintained.

Selection for the Guild's Craftsman and Associate Craftsman, and most of the other awards, are judged over the annual April conference weekend.

Please see our website for details of awards and entry requirements.
